Ramjas College, in collaboration with MHRD, IPR Chair of the University of Delhi and Centre for Science Education and Communication are jointly organizing a two day IPR workshop for college teachers of science stream from 10th to 11th August 2016 at Ramjas College.

Intellectual Property Rights (IPRs) are a set of exclusive and territorial rights protected by law which are accorded to creators over their creations for a certain time period. Infringement of IPR can be a serious offence both in the domestic and international scenarios. Academic institutions play an important role in providing educated and skilled human resource to industries, government, teaching and R&D. The academia puts heavy demands on R&D in scientific, engineering and other areas in order to respond to market needs quickly. This may call for a paradigm change in the manner research is done in the universities and emphasis would need to be placed on the practical business realities involved in technology development.

The objectives of this program are:

- To sensitize the targeted participants about IPR and their protection
- To create awareness about Copyrights and avoidance of plagiarism and to promote ethics in science
- To identify protectable inventions
- To train the participants about the mechanism of accessing and using IP information to teach and for further R&D in developing new products and processes.
